rom the Burlington Hawkeye If I had told her in the spring
Theold, old story briefly,
When the sparrow and the robin began to sing,
And the plowing was over chiefly!

But haste makes waste, and the story sweet, I reasoned, will keep through the sowing, Till I drop the corn and plant the wheat, And give them a chance for growing. Had I told the tale in June.

When the wind through the grass was blowing.
Instead of thinking it rather too soon,
And waiting this after the mowing:

Or had I hinted, under the stars, That I knew a story worth hearing, Lingering to put up the pasture bars, Nor waiting to do the shearing! Now the barn is full, and so is the bin, flut I've grown wise without gory. Since leve is the crop not gathered in; For my neighbor fold her the story.

He has always been reticent concerning his positive tatements on religious topics, but his recent address on "The Preacher," delivered pelore the students in divinity chapel of Harvard University, evidently contains his latest sentiments, and is so largely a review of the religious situation and an outlook into the near future, such a frank and large minded avowal of opinions which many have hoped he entertained that no utterance of his since the famous ermon on the Lord's Supper, delivered in 1832, on his retirement from the Unitarian ninistry, is likely to command wide attention Mr. Emerson justly remarks that TRADE MARK. But; certainly, on this seventh, let us be children of liberty, of reason, of hope; refresh the sentiments; think as spirits think who belong to the universe, while our feet walk the streets of a little town, and our hands work in a small knot of affairs." He closes this remarkable essay with a sentence which is a summary of all that can be done for men in the new age which we are nearing: "The open secret of the world is the art of subliming a private soul with inspirations the new age which we are nearing: "The open secret of the world is the art of subliming a private soul with inspirations from the great and public and divine Soul from which we live." Now, professed religionists may turn away from this statement of the sentiments and ethical forces which are working in the permanent life of men, and say that it is too Emersonian to be real, too ideal for practical life; it certainly is somewhat fragmentary; but all great men-grasp truth by fragments, and Mr. Emerson is no exception. What attracts attention in the essay, what gives emphasis to these tragments of outlook, is that they indicate the bent of things for the new religious day by one of the subtlest thinkers of our time. They are conservative opinions by one who has always been considered a radical; they show the polarity of a great mind to the central things which constitute the ethics of all true religion. They furnish no system, but they indicate the spirit, the direction, the force, the living power, by which men are to be held to the kindred duties of heaven and home in this and the coming age. Ralph Waldo Emerson has done no better service to religious truth, in his long and courageous life, than in the words which we have shaped into a slightly formal statement of his view of the religious situation.

VALENTINES.

What a Few of the Leading Styles Will b This Year. From the Boston Transcript.

The American valentines come early this year, and are so pretty that unless their English and German cousins follow quickly there will be no demand for them. They are of innumerable sizes, as they have been former years, but the prettiest among those of moderate dimension for backgrounds a solid mass of violets apple blossoms or pausies, upon which lie gilt panel with a picture of a girl, and a label inscribed with sundry verses, referring to the flowers and interpreting the supposed feelings of the sender, unless indeed, he be skilled with the pen and chooses to buy a card with a blank label rather than to say—

"Violets are blue,
Love's eyes are bluer,
I know, I know;
Some men's hearts are true
Maid's hearts are truer,
"Tisso, 'tis so,"

Saucy girls who wish to tease a lover Satury girls who wish to tease a lover, even while sending him a token of affection, might like the gray cards upon which shine golden hearts almost covered by dainty button-hole boquets of carnation and Lady Pollock geranium tied in a true blue ribbon. The poem printed in bright brown letters on either side of the design, savs—
